Otacon Industries Military Stealth Suit

Otacon Industries was contracted by the Empire to create a suit, a soldier could wear that would keep him invisible. Otacon Industries had been experimenting in a liquid that would change the object clear or at least a light shadowy green. They were unsure if it would work or affect a human. The Empire then brought fourth a near dead soldier code named "Grey Fox." Grey Fox was barely alive. He only sustained his existence by a group of machines that left his blaster ridden body intact. Otacon Industries decided to build the experimental armor around him, add legs and give him a special helmet. They injected him and the armor with the liquid. They more or less fused the to people together much like the known Darth Vader. Altho this was amuch more recent and improvement over the older Vader model. Grey Fox was givin a super eye outside the helmet that boosted his perception. He whole body became one with the suit. He was experimentaly used on test operations. He preformed excellently. The suit gave him near invisibility, super senses, great agility and movement and a strength unmatched by any normal human. Thw downside was that he lost his personal side, all free thought and imagination since he was fused with the machine. His mind signals a computer which injects his body and suit with the experimental liquid and makes him near invisible. After a few missions he was equiped with a new sword that could cut throgh nearly everything. He was greatly pleased with this. He then preformed a few more operations. The sword gave him a sense of his old self. His orginal mind took over the suit and he relized the slave he became. He broke free, took anew arm blaster that was going to be equiped on him and then killed most of the Imperial guards and Otacon Industries personel. He disapered without a trace. The plans were hidden away and another prototype was not considered. Grey Fox now roams the galaxy...
