Imperial Cougar Medium Repulsortank

Developed shortly before the Battle of Hoth, the Cougar medium repulsortank was contracted to the StormElite as an economic variant of a repulsortank that could be produced at a rate close to three times that of the Jagdghest. General of the Legion Alwen Kowell, an experienced repulsortank commander, accepted the proposal.

The Cougar medium repulsortank is like that of any military's tank: fast, agile, and well equipped. But, due to 'quality over quantity' tactics employed by the SE, the Cougar really didn't hold well with StormElite repulsortank commanders. Cev-Narvon Industries lost it's Cougar licensing contract just a week prior to the Battle of Endor.

Legion General Alwen Kowell and Under-General Freyler Von Sherrdon both agreed that the tank was considered too much of a waste for ever-depleting StormElite military funds. It was discontinued just in the nick of time: the Empire was to fall a week later.
