Description:

In the early years of the war, the Rebellion had to deal with decades-old warships held together by the sweat and ingenuity of the Rebel technicians. With major-shipbuilding worlds like Sullust and Dac throwing their support behind the Alliance after the Battle of Yavin, Mon Mothma asked for their full effort in modernizing the Fleet. In an effort to speed up development, Sorosuub targeted older designs and updated key systems with state-of-the-art technology. The first result of this was the Hornet II Carrier.

Based on Sorosuub's B30 Heavy Escort and original Hornet Carrier from the Clone Wars, the Hornet II is an assault carrier that boasts powerful ion drives and an array of offensive weapons. Its speed allows the Hornet to engage superior enemies and retreat for backup before being overwhelmed. The design is balanced to carry a large number of starfighters while still supporting heavy weapons capable of fighting capital ships. An advanced targeting array maximizes the effectiveness of the limited weapon emplacements.

The new Hornet Carrier first entered the Republic Fleet a year after the Battle of Endor, and it performed admirably during the Core Campaigns that led to the liberation of Coruscant. As the New Republic worked to earn legitimacy as the governing power in the galaxy, the Hornet and its fighter squadrons helped maintain regular patrols of allied sectors, keeping an eye out for outlaw warships and Imperial raiders. Sorosuub's assault carrier played a significant role in the Fleet for decades; many Hornet Carriers were still in active service during the Yuuzhan Vong invasion.
