

Weapons D6 / Feydrakin EchoDefense Cannon

Feydrakin EchoDefense Cannon

The EchoDefense series weapons were created by the Feydrakin alliance in the deep core. The alliance is a coalition of systems with all variety of alien races living on them. They banded together against the onslaught of the anti-alien prejudice of the empire. Even human worlds in the area joined the alliance and through their combined efforts they repelled the empire. One of the reasons for this was the EchoDefense series weapons.

They use highly concentrated and very powerful sonic waves. They overlap approximately 200 harmonics over each other in a single wave and send them out in bursts where the waves are packed incredibly close together. With a powerful energy source and transmission system it can release this energy in a cone of sonic energy capable of large destruction. Things caught within the blast of an EchoDefense weapon literally shake themselves apart.

The ED-28 was the original EchoDefense Weapon based off a legendary dark side weapon. It is on a traversing and swiveling mount on the top of a small obelisk. The transmitter itself is a fairly large bell shaped chamber plated with acoustic tile like material. The hollow of the 'bell' is aimed in the direction the blast is to be fired.

The two crews stand 2 meters below at the base of the obelisk, on whatever side is opposite from the direction the weapon is being aimed. The controls are set into a remote which can be stored in a small compartment in the obelisk itself. The crews just pull the remote out, stand back in safety and direct it with the remote. The weapon's power source is built into the obelisk, which can be moved onto a specialized flatbed speeder, but because of its small size it takes a while for it to cool and build up enough of a charge to fire the weapon again so it has a very slow fire rotation.

All and all this is a very devastating weapon out on the field, still powerful enough to tear apart a speeder coming in, it utterly destroys any infantry soldiers within its firearc.
