Graas Jhouea (Gr?s Zhoo-eeah)

The Graas Jhouea is a large, solitary predator capable of taking down almost any other life-form in existance. Instead of being a lesser foe over time, their unique adrenal glands make them a more worthy foe with every passing second.

They are a long, snake-like predator, with two 'arms' budding out near their head, with razor-sharp 'flails' extruding from where their elbow would be. Their head has two inset eyes with a second eyelid that protects the eye during combat with no vision impairments. Their mouths have no teeth; instead they have two openings that spray a potent acid, breaking down substances enough to be able to pass into their digestive tract. Their skin also is covered with a slimy gel that reduces friction while they move, making them more difficult to hear as they approach.
