

Mestic av-2000 Anti-Vehicle Rifle

The av-2000 is a massive weapon capable of firing a 15mm projectile at super-sonic speeds. It is generally mounted on a bipod and fired from a distance using the sighting macroscope.

Very few were sold to non-military forces, and those that were, weren't used in their intended role. There has been more than one incident where an av-2000 was used in assassinations, literally blasting their targets into charred bits and pieces.

During initial tests of the av-2000, it was fired at several older ground vehicles ranging from trucks up to repulsortanks. In all cases, the av-2000 was able to pierce through the armor and explode inside the vehicle. The only problem discovered was that the av-2000 is generally too powerful for its own good when used against people or lightly armored vehicles, often times the shell going right through the target without exploding.
