

AT-AT2

The AT-AT2 has nothing in common with the original. First, the "2" has eight legs and knee-blasters like the MT-AT. The legs are mounted four to a side on a box-shaped body. Second, it has no head. The command compartment is in the body and the primary weapons are mounted on a scorpion-like tail. Third, it has no passenger space. Troops ride in a removable passenger compartment that sits atop the body. In addition, the troop compartment can be replaced with a mount for any Imperial heavy artillery weapon. Fourth, the "2" is 30kmh faster than its predecessor. The AT-AT2 appeared suddenly during the Yuuzhan Vong invasion. It was a rush design by the Department of Military Research on Bastion using components from the MT-AT and AT-AT. Thus far it has only been seen in armoured regiments also equipped with the MT-AT.
