Biography

Early life

Lindon Javes was born on Todirium III, where he served in the Todirium militia. He had a sister named Dela, who at some point died during what Javes' file referred to as "hazardous maneuvers."

Galactic Empire

Javes was recruited into the Galactic Empire's Imperial Starfighter Corps on Reega II and gained expertise in advanced hazardous flight training, going on to become a qualified flight instructor. He served as a captain in the Imperial Navy and commanding officer of Helix Squadron. Following the destruction of the planet Alderaan in 0 BBY, Darth Vader had given an order to hunt down any refugees who had escaped the planet's destruction. Javes was ultimately given the assignment, though Javes had no intentions of killing innocent civilians and instead planned to rescue them. After hunting down the freighter with the civilians, Javes double crossed his wingmen and disabled their fighters with an ion torpedo. When Alliance forces arrived to assist, Javes immediately defected. The Empire charged Javes with desertion and mutiny, punishable by execution; providing aid to the enemies of the Empire, also punishable by execution; and theft of Imperial property (1 TIE/ad v1).

Rebel Alliance

After joining the rebels, he hunted Imperial capital ships which allowed him to rise through the ranks of the Alliance.

New Republic

By the time after the Battle of Endor in 4 ABY, despite still being a combat pilot at heart, Javes had learned of his talent for command. Accordingly, he coordinated several successful missions behind the Empire's lines. As the Galactic Civil War entered a new phase, Javes was given command of Vanguard Squadron as well as a classified assignment for the New Republic. He also worked as a special consultant for General Hera Syndulla.

Several weeks after the Battle of Endor, Javes attended a session with Syndulla about a plan to attack the Empire's 204th Imperial Fighter Wing at the planet Pandem Nai. When reviewing predictions made by Lieutenant Yrica Quell, the developer of the plan, Javes agreed with her. Around 5 ABY, he and Vanguard Squadron went on a mission in the Bormea sector to better the New Republic's starship supply.

Personality and traits
