Capsule: Although the Victory Class was the first mass produced type of Star Destroyer, the Cantwell class was an experimental design that was built in limited numbers to test the concepts before the investment was made to design and build the Victory Class. The Cantwell Class is a fairly primitive design, and although it feature some extremely powerful systems, it is a weak and flawed capital ship design. The few Cantwell's that were built have mainly survived the years, but only because they never had to play a part in any major battles. Some were sold off the the Corporate Sector Authority, and some were mothballed or put into reserve fleets and therefore ended up in New Republic hands. The New Republic's lack of capital ships has meant that a couple of Cantwell Class Destroyers have been put into front line service, but significant refit and upgrades were necessary to bring these ships up to standard.
