Description: Originally built exclusively for the Trade Federation, these massive transport vessels provided the backbone of that institution, but after the Clone Wars began and trade between the Kessel shipyards and the Trade Federation was outlawed, the remaining completed vessels were sold off onto the open market for discounted prices. Much larger than any of their competition, and armed fairly well for cargo vessels, these ships were converted to other use by many who owned them, following in the Trade Federations footsteps in converting the vessels into command vessels, and battleships. Larger than many combat capital ships, the LH-3210 could easily be converted into powerful battle ready vessels, while retaining massive storage space for landing ships, fighters and transported troops and vehicles. However the full price of these vessels was too high for anybody except an interstellar conglomerate or rich planetary government to afford, meaning that the fall of the Trade Federation at the end of the Clone Wars also doomed the production of this vessel.
