Description: Rook Kast was a human female Mandalorian warrior who led the Shadow Collective's super commandos during the Clone Wars. After Maul, leader of the Shadow Collective, was imprisoned by the Sith on Stygeon Prime, Kast and commando Gar Saxon freed Maul and brought him to a Shadow Collective base on Zanbar. They were tracked by the forces of the Confederacy of Independent Systems and, in the ensuing battle, forced to flee to Ord Mantell. From there, they repelled a Separatist attack. Kast and Maul captured the Droid Army General Grievous in orbit, while Maul's ground forces captured the Separatist leader, Count Dooku.

The Shadow Collective took their prisoners to a Mandalorian asteroid base, which was assaulted by the Galactic Republic and Jedi Order in an attempt to capture Dooku themselves. Kast, Maul, Dooku, and some of Maul's forces fled and set a course for Dathomir. They were tracked by Darth Sidious, the Dark Lord of the Sith, who fought alongside Dooku and Grievous in destroying the Shadow Collective forces. Kast recovered Maul from the battle, and they fled the planet.

Later, Kast participated in the Siege of Mandalore and helped lure an unsuspecting Ahsoka Tano into the undercity of Sundari. There, she and several other super commandos surrounded the former Jedi Padawan for Maul, but she eventually managed to escape. Shortly afterwards, the super commandos managed to capture ARC Trooper Jesse and interrogate him. After his interrogation, Maul managed to rally the Mandalorians for one last push, but this led to defeat and Kast's capture at the hands of Bo-Katan Kryze.

Following the rise of the Galactic Empire, Kast and her remaining Mandalorian super commandos continued to serve Maul. She joined Maul, leading the restored Shadow Collective on the planet Janix, and aided the former Sith in his revenge plot against the other syndicates for abandoning the Collective at the end of the Clone Wars. During this time, Kast organized a raid on a bank tower and later another to rescue the crime boss Looti Vario from imprisonment in the city's police headquarters. With Vario in the custody of the Shadow Collective at their base in Sector 14-Q, Kast later led an infiltration of a Pyke shipment, using the intel Maul forced Vario to reveal.

After an ambush on Maul's safe house, Maul, Kast and her mercenaries relocated to a new base, just as the Imperial occupation of Janix began. Soon after, the Imperials blocked all travel from the planet, they tracked Kast and her allies to their new base, initiating a devastating battle, that cost the lives of many of her forces. Following the battle, Maul convinced Kast that they needed to ally themselves with Jedi Master Eeko-Dio Daki, his Padawan Devon Izara and Tactical Defense Force Captain Brander Lawson to escape the planet and rendezvous with Dryden Vos.

While Maul and Kast's forces navigated an underground passageway alongside the Jedi, Two-

Boots, and Brander and Rylee Lawson, they engaged the Inquisitors First Brother and Eleventh Brother, as well as their TK stormtrooper forces by an acid lake. When the survivors emerged from the tunnel at the edge of the foggy jungle, Kast offered to scout ahead with her last surviving Mandalorian mercenary. However, Kast soon ran back to Maul and reported that she had encountered someone in the fog. Moments later, the Mandalorian warrior was Force-pulled back into the fog and killed by Darth Vader.

Personality and traits

Rook Kast was intensely loyal to the Shadow Collective cause and to Maul, to the point she became one of the first Super Commandos to swear loyalty to the former Sith and donned his colors on her armor, embracing her warrior heritage. She personally went to evacuate Maul on multiple occasions and showed concern for his safety as he faced Grievous on Zanbar and even forcibly attempted to bring Maul onto his ship on Dathomir before the Separatists landed their troops and laid waste to the world. When Black Sun and the Pykes announced to Kast that they would no longer aid the Collective, Kast was quick to make the threat that she would go after them and kill them herself should they desert. Though some Mandalorians, such as Bo-Katan Kryze and many of her Nite Owls, refused to accept Maul as the leader of Mandalore due to him being an outsider—despite besting the previous leader, Pre Vizsla, in combat—Maul's non-Mandalorian heritage did not present an issue for Kast, and she faithfully served him regardless.

Kast remained loyal to Maul for many years after the Clone War. During the Imperial Era, she led a group of Mandalorian mercenaries and Zabrak loyalists who were in service of Maul.

Kast was a female member of the human species, who stood at 1.61 meters tall. She had brown hair, blue eyes, and fair skin. By the time of the Siege of Mandalore, Kast had purple hair.

Skills and abilities

Kast was a ferocious warrior on the battlefield, unafraid to utilize merciless tactics on her enemies. She used blasters and a jetpack with extreme efficiency, more so than that of her fellow soldiers. She was also known for her strategic awareness. Kast was proficient in hand-to-hand combat as well, holding off clones and a few members of the Mandalore resistance in a fistfight, before Bo-Katan Kryze overpowered her and forced her to surrender to the Republic's forces. Kast also understood binary and regularly translated what Spybot said to Maul.

Equipment

Like all Mandalorian soldiers, Kast wore Mandalorian armor over a black body glove, as well as a unique jetpack, with two large side thrusters that could be used to launch missiles. Around each of her forearms was a Mandalorian vambrace, which contained a zipline and a flamethrower. Kast's armor, like most Mandalorian super commandos, was painted red and black, meant to resemble Maul's appearance, and featured the Shadow Collective's black hand symbol on her right shoulder pad. Kast's helmet was different from most traditional Mandalorian helmets, featuring two-pointed slopes atop it. During the Imperial Era, Kast retained the same markings on her armor and helmet, although the red beskar had become scratched. During the Siege of Mandalore, Kast utilized two WESTAR-35 blaster pistols, which she continued to use during the Imperial Era. In a warehouse, Kast wielded a rocket launcher to destroy a some glowing material in a crate that was open by 2B0T and Reb.
