Lumnar LS-5 Light Shield

The LS-5 was the first publicly released lightshield created by Lumnar Industries. Light Shields use different technology than typical energy shields. It creates a field of invisible ionized static. It hangs loosely around the wearer. When an energy blast or high velocity projectile starts to pass through the field, it constricts and forms a crystal clear energy shield that can deflect the attacks. The effect is such that it looks like a glass bubble or the like suddenly appears around the wearer deflecting the attack. Because the field protects against firearms and has a much longer duration Light Shields are preferable to standard energy shields. They are however much more expensive and still do not deflect low velocity objects such as needle guns, thrown knives, or melee attacks. Also these don't work off actual pwoerpacks. They have rechargeable energy cells, and adapters come free with the pruchase of the units so they can be recharged at home.

The LS-5 consists of two units worn on the forearms. The forearm units consist of band around the wrist and halfway up the forearms and a thick disc-like part that covers the back of the hand. One of the forearm units always houses the controls for the LS-5. These can be seen in the hands of some bounty hunters and mercenaries. They are evry expensive though and have to be recharged often, and obviously they cannot be kept on at all times.
