Flora and Fauna:

Celanor is mostly industrial wasteland, most of the plant and animal life has died due to the changing in the planet's atmosphere, temperature and water caused by pollutants and industrial waste products. Mutated fish and aquatic plant life live in one of Celanor's only non-polluted lakes, and are protected by a group of environmentalists who won over the lake by paying the Moff 5 billion credits.

Sentient Species:

Although Celanor has no sentient life, it does have traces of an ancient Feline race that made it to a high stone age society. Ruins of ancient cities have been found by miners.

History:

Celanor has a long history dating back to the early times of the Old Republic. It was first discovered in the expansion time, and colonized by a small settlement which made the discovery of rich mineral filled rock which made up most of the planet. Celanor quickly grew as a mining planet, originally mining duranium and ironium. When the Old Republic fell, Celanor quickly claimed independence, it started to build refineries and factories to construct military equipment to defend itself from a hostile race called the Kamisurians. Celanor wasn't fast enough in building a military force and fell under a Kamisurian invasion. Many of the people living on Celanor were used as slaves and industrial production was put into full gear. Soon after Celanor was liberated by a force led by a young Jedi who was elected president of the planet. The Jedi defended Celanor and its inhabitants fiercely during the Clone Wars. He was killed by Darth Vader and the planet was taken under Imperial rule. The Imperials began to make Celanor a primary Durasteel producer, and used it to construct its own defense fleet. Celanorians were still forced to work at minimum wage by Moff Liftose, and were brutally abused by Imperial soldiers. The Rebellion sprang, and Celanor's defense fleet was moved elsewhere, leaving a few ships to keep the planet's population under control. Towards the end of the Rebellion, A Rebel fleet consisting of 2 MC80s, and 6 Attack Frigates with full fighter complements engaged in a large battle against the Empire's defenses. The two Victory-class Star Destroyers were knocked out and plummeted into Celanor's moon. Moff Liftose hid deep within Celanor's mining tunnels with a small force of loyal Imperials. Celanor did not remain free for long, Grand Admiral Weji Ynehtam's fleet re-took the planet from the Rebels and appointed the old Moff as overseer. Celanor is now a wasteland from the combination of war and pollution.
