Starships D20 / Lancer Interceptor

Lancer Interceptor

Kashan Systems, a fledgling company based off of the Mid Rim planet Kashan, entered the starfighter market with their TX-119 Lancer Interceptor. Unfortunately for Kashan, the design never really caught on due to the more popular starfighter designs (such as the T-65 X-Wing) that were already dominating the market. It did, however, catch on in the Palvar Sector, the same sector that the company bases out of. Most were sold to legimate law enforcement agencies and planetary defense forces, although Kashan has no problem selling the ships to pirates and mercenaries as well.

The ship itself isn't a remarkably unique design. It contains a central fuselage (similar to the main body on an X-Wing) that houses the cockpit and all the main flight systems. At the end are three massive Incom ion drive engines, each with a meter long atmospheric stabilizer fin extending off of it.
