GalacTech's H-14 Medium Repeating Blaster is designed to fill the role of both light and heavy repeating blasters, being light enough to be carried and fired by a single man, but producing heavy firepower and suitable for mounting on a tripod with a generator. The necessary generator is built into the tripod and only a single gunner is needed when firing, and it is also designed to work off vehicle power as well. The tripod also features a seat for the gunner, ensuring the gunner is in the same position relative to the weapon every time. A popular selling point is it can be used as a vehicle weapon, then dismounted and carried into battle if the vehicle needs to be left behind. Unfortunately as a personal weapon it is exceptionally heavy, requiring a very strong soldier to bear it, and even then tiring the bearer far faster than a light repeating blaster, as well as chewing power packs twice as fast. As a mounted weapon it lacks the range and punch of a heavy repeating blaster.

Already having a large supply of both light and heavy repeating blasters the Empire and most planetary forces did not adopt the H-14, however, the Rebel Alliance likes the weapon as a large number of wookiee's and other strong beings fill the rebel ranks, able to wield it, and appreciating its portable firepower against AT-ST's and other light Imperial armor.
