Background: Jaing Skirata, originally known as Null-10 or simply N-10, was a Null-class Advanced Recon Commando in the Grand Army of the Republic. After the Clone Wars, he became a Mandalorian member of Clan Skirata.

He was named after the Mandalorian training master Jaing. According to Kal Skirata, Jaing was an "artist amongst data deceivers" and could, along with fellow Null Kom'rk, "track a flitnat across the galaxy." His weapon of choice was the Verpine shatter gun.

Due to high casualties among the Clone Commandos in the Battle of Geonosis, new special forces troops were needed and Jaing assisted in the training of the Covert Ops clone troopers, who were ordinary troopers who had shown special forces potential.

As of a year into the Clone Wars, Jaing was, as Fi put it, "cannoned up and hiking with extreme prejudice in the Bakura sector". Along with Kom'rk and clone shadow troopers, he was one of the Clone Intelligence units responsible for locating General Grievous on Utapau. They did this as early as 21 BBY, but Jaing felt that the information had came to them too easily and that someone wanted them to know that Grievous was based there, so he didn't report this information to his superiors until the end of the Clone Wars.

Later that year, he accompanied Kal Skirata in transporting an injured Fi aboard the Aay'han to Mandalore. While there, Walon Vau asked Jaing if he would consider looking after his pet strill, Mird, if anything happened to him, as Jaing had always seemed less repelled by the creature than the rest of the Nulls. He agreed, putting Vau's mind at rest. After returning to Coruscant Jaing, along with Mereel Skirata investigated a bug in the treasury system. While there, he openly insulted one whom he and Mereel suspected to be a Republic Intelligence spy after she addressed him simply as 'clone'.

Following the disappearance and consequent discovery of a dismembered Kaminoan cloning scientist, Ko Sai, Jaing sported a fine pair of grey-skinned gloves.

Jaing was responsible for designing and uploading a banking virus, which siphoned off one or two Republic credits from trillions of accounts, for personal use by Clan Skirata, doing so by knowing the people wouldn't notice it and the ones who did would write it off as a banking fee. Jaing was formally adopted by Kal Skirata, and after Order 66, Jaing deserted the GAR with his Null brothers. Jaing was able to retrieve data off a damaged data chip belonging to exiled Jedi Iri Camas, after Camas caused a gas explosion. The data it contained was a valuable list of Jedi who survived the purge, their locations and vehicles, as well as possible Jedi sympathizers. Using this information, Bardan Jusik was able to contact former Jedi Master Djinn Altis and his Altisian Jedi clan to discuss possible partnerships and refuge for three Jedi that found their way to Kal Skirata's Kyrimorut compound on Mandalore.
