Background on Dorian Gray

A vain aristocrat, Dorian Gray had a picture painted of himself when he was in his prime of his youth. Overwhelmed by the fear of his own mortality, he wished that the painting would age while he would remain forever young. Through some dark, occult mechanism, this wish became reality. Somewhere in his vast painting gallery lies the key to his secret powers.

As an immortal, Dorian has spent several lifetimes in pursuit of corruption and perversion. He scours the ranks of England's young aristocracy corrupting and destroying them. With each New Year, his painting grows older; and with each new crime, his painting shows a soul in horrific decay. He has been given a chance to change all that, to atone finally, for such a long stretch of evil. If he can save the British Empire, perhaps he can save himself as well. But is he up to the task?

Dorian Gray cannot be killed. Even rapid fire machine gun bullets wielded by the cutting-edge army of Fanthom pass through his body without harm. This extreme physical prowess coupled with a guiltless conscience makes Dorian a devastating killing machine. And with the knowledge he has accrued throughout his extraordinarily long life, Dorian is perhaps the most dangerous member of the League.

His only weakness is to be found in his painting. a veritable road map of his past and his secret sins, the painting may be the only thing about Dorian that is telling the truth.

Quote: “If that had been permanent, I'd have been very upset!” Roleplaying Dorian Gray

Immortal. Seductive. Dangerous. Dorian Gray is one of the most infamous men of the 19th century. He made a wish to never age, to never die... but what was the cost to his soul?

Once a man, Dorian has grown less and less human with every passing year that has made him no older. While his painting decays and shows all his crimes and sins, Dorian remains free, young and alive forever. His power, created only by an idle wish, binds him to nothing, no science or occult force controls him. He is free from all humanity, unleashed into the world without morality or fear of any damnation
