Description: Bonzami were large, four-legged beasts that could be found on Bahryn, one of Geonosis' moons. They had large, axe-shaped jaws, and were resistant to blaster bolts.

Bonzami were massive, quadrupedal creatures that thrived in frigid temperatures. They had plated spines, razor-sharp teeth, and armored heads with horned mouths. Their bodies were mostly covered in white fur, which allowed them to blend in easily with their gelid environment in spite of their large size. Their hide was resistant to blaster bolts, which made them difficult to kill, although they could be driven away by a high enough rate of fire.

Bonzami were predators that hunted both alone and in packs.

Bonzami could be found on Bahryn, one of fifteen moons that orbited the Outer Rim planet Geonosis. In the third year before the Battle of Yavin, Agent Kallus, a member of the Imperial Security Bureau, and Garazeb Orrelios, an anti-Empire freedom fighter, found themselves trapped together in a cavern on Bahryn after the escape pod they were in crash-landed on the moon. While trying to overcome their enmity and find a way out, the two were attacked by a bonzami, which they successfully fended off using their bo-rifles. Later, two bonzami emerged, but the pair managed to narrowly escape through the hole punched through the cave's ceiling.
