Description: The Jashwik were a species of orange-skinned, jowled humanoids that hailed from the planet of Jashwa and were related to the Sullustans of Sullust. Cody Sunn-Childe was a Jashwik. He once theorized that his species was possibly a naturally Force-sensitive one.

Like their Sullustan cousins from Sullust, the Jashwik were a humanoid species, with two arms, two legs, and a head. Their face had a mouth and a nose, two eyes, all arranged in the same approximate positions as on a Human's head. They had peach-colored skin and their thick-lipped mouths were filled with white, blunt teeth. Their eyes were globulous and egg-shaped, with a yellowish sclera and a small black pupil. Their arms ended in hands with four long, claw-like fingers, including an opposable thumb to aid grasping. Contrary to the Sullustans, who sported wide, round earlobes, the Jashwik had tapered ears. Males of the species also had the ability to grow hair, both on the top of the head and on the cheeks and chin. The Jashwik also had knees that bent forward, thus allowing them to sit on their buttocks with their back upright. During emotional stress, a Jashwik would go though a perspiration process to maintain normal body temperature. It was speculated that the whole species was naturally keenly attuned to the Force, a mystic energy that flowed through all living things and bound the galaxy together, but only in a latent way.

Society and culture

Some male Jashwik favored shoulder-length hairstyles and dressed in bright colors—including yellow, red and blue. At least one individual was known to have worn leather-like high boots with a blousing shirt and a cape.

History

The Jashwik originated on the planet of Jashwa. They were related to the Sullustans, a diminutive species of Near-Humans from Sullust, who had similar facial jowls and beady eyes.
