Description: Shaeeah Lawquane was a female human-Twi'lek hybrid who was the daughter of Suu Lawquane and the adopted daughter of Cut Lawquane, a clone deserter, during the Clone Wars. Shaeeah and her family lived on Saleucami until shortly after the rise of the Galactic Empire.

Biography

Early life

Shaeeah Lawquane was a female human-Twi'lek hybrid born in 26 BBY to the Twi'lek Suu Lawquane. At some point after the First Battle of Geonosis, Suu met a clone trooper deserter named Cut. Cut married Suu, making him become the adoptive father to Shaeeah and her younger brother, Jek Lawquane.

The Clone Wars

In 21 BBY, during the Battle of Saleucami, Captain Rex was injured by a commando droid sniper, rather than call off the search for General Grievous, Rex was given a bacta patch and taken to the Lawquane's farm. Suu allowed Rex to recover overnight in their barn. While Suu was giving Rex food, The ball Shaeeah was playing with flew into the barn. Shaeeah ran in after it, and upon seeing Rex's face, remarked on the similarity between him and her father.

Later that night, Shaeeah and Jek finished their dinner and went to play outside. While running in the field surrounding their house, Shaeeah and Jek stumbled across a Separatist escape pod from the battle overhead. They decided to explore the pod, and while inside, Shaeeah hit a button with her elbow, activating the commando droids stored within. Shaeeah and Jek ran back to their house, where they told their father of the encounter. After Cut confirmed the identity of the droids, he sent Shaeeah, Jek, Suu, and Rex to the upper level of the house for protection. Cut remained downstairs and fought the droids. After defeating many of the droids, Cut became trapped, and the remaining droids attempted to head upstairs. Rex defended the family, while Cut freed himself and defeated the remaining droids.

The next morning, Rex had recovered enough to return to service. As they had developed a friendship, Cut offered for Rex to remain with the Lawquanes. Rex declined his offer, saying that his family was elsewhere. When Suu asked if Rex would turn in Cut to the Republic, Rex agreed not to, using his injury as an excuse to feign amnesia and ignorance of the situation. The Lawquanes then saw Rex off, as he rode back to his squad on an eopie they had allowed him to use.

Imperial Era

By the time the new Galactic Empire was declared, the patches of pink and blue skin had shifted somewhat. When clone troopers began to identify citizens and impound ships on Saleucami, Cut knew that he would likely be discovered and planned to move his family offworld. They were soon visited by Rex, followed by Clone Force 99 the day after that. Shaeeah and Jek were excited to see their "Uncle Wrecker," and would spend time with Omega playing outside. Eventually the two children went inside to finish packing and, with the help of the Bad Batch, were able to forge chain codes and make if offworld.

Personality and traits

Shaeeah was a Human/Twi'lek hybrid with blue skin interspersed with light pink patches, bright pink eyes, a slender build, and lekku that reached her waist. As a child, she was very playful and mischievous. She enjoyed scaring her brother, Jek. She enjoyed spending time outside, often begging to do so. At times, she would play with a floating ball, which she would lose control of and chase after. When the family was visited by Clone Force 99, Shaeeah and her brother would form a good relationship with Wrecker, whom they would grow to refer to as "Uncle Wrecker." When Clone Force 99 returned after the rise of the Galactic Empire, Shaeeah was excited to meet Omega, saying that they never got to hang out with other kids.

Equipment

Shaeeah wore a green dress with a brown belt. She also wore a brown head wrap with wraps around her lekku.

Shaeeah owned a small floating ball that she would play with and chase.
