Description: Dan G'vash was a human male Jedi Padawan. G'vash traveled with his master Tajin Crosser to investigate a disturbance in the Force on the planet Habo. After locating a local village, the two Jedi found a ship that Crosser believed looked like one that a Sith would use. While Crosser suggested they wait together at the ship for the individual to return, G'vash suggested he search through the mountains surrounding the village while his master stayed with the ship. Crosser agreed to the plan, and when G'vash noticed a slain vamga, he shortly after encountered an elder individual wielding two small red lightsabers. G'vash was outmatched by his opponent, suffering a serious injury when he engaged the warrior in a duel, but he was later able to help his master finish off their opponent.

Personality and traits
G'vash was a determined Padawan apprentice with black hair, blue eyes, and dark skin. He was underwhelmed by his adventures in the Outer Rim Territories, as he was hoping for more exciting action. When visiting Habo with his master, he was able to form a relationship with several local children when he spotted them looking at him, winking and smiling at them and later enlisting their help to explore the mountain areas near their village in his search for a possible Sith warrior. Despite recruiting the children to help him, G'vash felt that he was capable in mountainous terrain.
