Description: Bok Askol was a Pacithhip female from Shimia who worked as a podracer engineer. In 32 BBY, she was present in Mos Espa spaceport on the planet Tatooine to attend the Boonta Eve Classic podrace. She spent time in the hangar of the Mos Espa Grand Arena before watching the race from the private box of the junk dealer Watto.

Biography
Bok Askol was born on Shimia around 56 BBY. She worked as a podracer engineer and had followed the dream of becoming an expert mechanic in the hopes of joining a podracing crew. Askol was in the spaceport of Mos Espa on the planet Tatooine to attend the Boonta Eve Classic podrace in the year 32 BBY.

Prior to the race, the Pacithhip spent time in the podracer hangar of the Mos Espa Grand Arena, where she spoke with a Quarren next to the podracer of the Nosaurian Clegg Holdfast. Askol then viewed the race itself from the private box of the Toydarian junk dealer Watto in the arena.

During the First Order occupation of the planet Batuu in 34 ABY, Askol was 90 years old. At this time, the pirate Hondo Ohnaka sent several stolen identity profiles, including a profile of Askol, to the datapads of several individuals in Black Spire Outpost on Batuu. The individuals were preparing to carry out a heist for Ohnaka Transport Solutions, and Ohnaka wished to test if they could remember information concerning a potential cover identity, quizzing them on details from each of the profiles.

Personality and traits
Askol had gray skin, blue eyes, and no hair. She stood 6 feet, 10 inches tall and weighed 269 pounds.

Equipment
The Pacithhip wore a set of green overalls during her time on Tatooine.
