Creatures D6 / Faendor Rioles

Faendor Rioles

The Riole is a seperate species yet a seperate gender at the same time. They and the Thressals are both like this. The Rioles are the Male Gender while the Thressals are the Female Gender, yet both are distinctly different species. They mate and females are Thressal and male are Riole, scientists aren't quite sure how this happened.

The Thressal is a very large and powerful predator but not anywhere near as fast as their counterparts, whom they do not asociate with except to mate.

    Transportation: Many of the creatures on the world of Faendor have developed this strange mode of transportation. It allows them to seemingly instantly transport from one spot to another spot nearby. It's not quite known how this works but it is beleived it isn't actual teleportation as they cannot move throguh solid objects, thusly they cannot just transport themselves outside of a room unless there's an opening they could normaly fit through. They use this short distances to Dodge, hence their high dodge skills, or as actual movememnt. If they use it as actual movement they may make no other movements this round and the movement counts as an action.
