Description: Sigel Dare was a Human female who served Emperor Roan Fel of the Empire-in-exile as an Imperial Knight Master during the Second Imperial Civil War. She was possessed of unwavering loyalty to Fel and an icy demeanor that saw her rigidly believe that an Imperial Knight's duty was to obey the Emperor's commands above all else, even the will of the Force. Dare was trained as an Imperial Knight by Master Treis Sinde prior to 137 ABY, and in that year, she accompanied the Emperor as he retook the fortress world of Bastion from the Sith Lord Darth Krayt's Imperial forces. She and Sinde were later sent by Fel to the planet Dac to sabotage the construction of a new Star Destroyer belonging to Krayt's Empire, and they planted three sets of explosives on the nearly-completed Imperious.

When the Destroyer was seized by Admiral Gar Stazi of the Galactic Alliance Remnant, Dare and Sinde infiltrated Sith–Imperial-occupied Dac and rescued several Alliance pilots from the clutches of Krayt's forces in an attempt to warn Stazi of the explosives they had planted. Sinde was stranded on the world, but their actions paved the way toward an eventual alliance between Stazi's fleet and Fel's Empire. Dare was later sent back to Dac to retrieve Sinde, and was accompanied by the Jedi Master Asaak Dan at both Dan's and Stazi's behest. When Sinde informed Dare that he would be staying on-planet to continue aiding the Mon Calamari Rangers in their fight against Krayt's forces, she angrily engaged her former Master in a duel that was quickly halted by Dan's intervention; Dan then took Sinde's place with the rangers and allowed both Knights to return to Bastion.

Dare and Sinde soon after joined a contingent of Imperial Knights that accompanied the Emperor to Agamar in order to conduct peace talks with the Jedi Order. The meeting was interrupted by forces of the One Sith, but the Emperor and most of the Imperial Knights were able to evacuate the planet. The solidified three-way alliance between the Empire-in-exile, Galactic Alliance, and the Jedi later attacked Krayt's throneworld of Coruscant, and Dare was part of an advanced strike team that infiltrated the planet and sabotaged its orbital defenses. She was non-fatally stabbed by a Sith during the battle, and Krayt was slain, an event which fractured his Sith Order and won the war for the allies. The Emperor was also killed after falling to the dark side of the Force, and Dare attended his funeral in the battle's aftermath.

Personality and traits

Sigel Dare had a light skin tone and brown hair and eyes with a mole near the outer corner of the left one. As of 137 ABY, Dare was a Master within the Imperial Knights. The title indicated that she was one of the organization's highest-ranking members. Dare was fiercely loyal to the cause of Emperor Roan Fel, and was very rigid in her approach to her duty, an approach which her former Master, Treis Sinde, saw as blinding her to the larger picture. While with Sinde on Dac, Dare was very reluctant to warn Admiral Gar Stazi of the explosives planted aboard his new flagship, as she felt that he was as much an enemy to her Emperor as the Sith were. Even while working to warn Stazi, Dare was smug in her actions, taunting several Galactic Alliance pilots and insisting that she and Sinde had outsmarted the admiral. In Stazi's presence, she sarcastically reminded him that her actions had played a large part in the disarming of the explosives; if the decision had been hers and not Sinde's, Dare would have left the Galactic Alliance pilots on Dac to die and allowed Stazi to perish aboard the Alliance.

Dare maintained that an Imperial Knight's duty was ultimately to the Emperor, rather than the Force as embodied by the Emperor. When retrieving Sinde from Dac, she insisted that he obey their Emperor's orders rather than listen to what the Force was telling him. Her staunch devotion to this attitude even saw her draw her lightsaber and attack her former Master, who displayed an unwillingness to return to Bastion. Dare attempted to kill him until Asaak Dan intervened.

Severely critical of both the Jedi and the Sith, Dare was greatly annoyed when Jedi Master Asaak Dan was permitted to accompany her on a retrieval mission to Dac, and felt that she needed to explain her plan to him several times in order for him to understand it. In spite of her open disregard for those who weren't part of Fel's Empire, however, she showed humility at times, such as when she acknowledged Master Dan's skills and bravery, when she bowed to Gar Stazi upon hearing his decision to open talks with Fel regarding a potential alliance, and when she was willing to defer to Treis Sinde's wisdom on Dac. As cold as ice, Dare did not want to admit that the galaxy was falling apart around her.

Powers and abilities

As an Imperial Knight, Dare was part of an organization whose members were considered to be among the most talented and dangerous Force-users in the galaxy. She was skilled with a lightsaber, and, during her training, she came to surpass her Master Treis Sinde's abilities with the weapon. She was also proficient with various uses of the Force, such as mind tricks and telekinesis. While on Agamar, Dare helped fight off a large group of Sith, and on Coruscant, she survived being stabbed in the chest while in combat against Sith and Sith troopers.
