Droids D6 / Disposable Assassin Droid

Disposable Assassin Droid

Technically assassin droids are quite illegal but both the Imperial Security Bureau and the Ubiqtorate have been known to use assassin droids in common practice.

Common assassin droids can be expensive to buy and maintain, especially if the droid finds itself in a fire fight before returning if it even survives that long. Sending these costly droids on suicide missions tends to put a tight strain on the budget. Seeing a chance at a quick profit, Welkret Electronics introduced their SCUD line of disposable assassion droids.

A disposable assassin droid costs thousands of credits less than your typical assassin droid but is only designed to be used once. Once the target's life signs cease the droid promptly self destructs, leaving no evidence of who sent it.

There has been at least one recorded instance of a SCUD assassin droid going to far lengths to make sure that its target did not die by putting him in permanent stasis. With his target still alive, the SCUD was left open to persue a career as a real assassin droid.
